

Asia-Pacific Regional Outreach Consultation on Building Evidence for the First High Level Meeting of the Global Partnership for Effective Development Cooperation

Seoul, 10th-11th March 2014

Consultations Report

Introduction

Representatives from government, international organisations, civil society and business from 24 countries¹ met to discuss regional perspectives and evidence on development co-operation with respect to the Global Partnership for Effective Development Co-operation (GPEDC).

The consultation was co-hosted by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Government of the Republic of Korea, and the Ministry of Finance, Government of the People's Republic of Bangladesh and supported by the Asia-Pacific Development Effectiveness Facility (AP-DEF) and the UNDP Seoul Policy Centre for Global Development Partnerships. In particular, countries discussed and developed inputs on specific agendas of the forthcoming GPEDC High Level Meeting (HLM) to be held in Mexico on 15-16 April 2014. In this sense, this outcome report captures the key discussions, evidence and recommendations of the Asia-Pacific regional consultation.

Opening

While the post-2015 agenda will express "what" progress we want to see over the next fifteen years, the GPEDC is seen as "how" it will come to underpin this agenda. As noted in the opening session with distinguished guest speakers, the First HLM of the GPEDC can only be successful if the perspectives of the most populous and diverse region, Asia-Pacific, are well represented.

Plenary One: Setting the Scene

Participants agreed that the GPEDC should come to represent the 'how' that underpins the 'what' that will be expressed through the post-2015 agenda. Therefore, we urgently need to make solid and tangible links between the two parallel processes at the HLM in Mexico.

The importance of the Mexico HLM is highlighted in pursuit of the future of the Global Partnership (and effective development cooperation agenda) as it is held in the context of setting the stage of Post-2015 development agenda. In particular, the HLM will pave the way to reinforce the institutionalization of the Global Partnership in the post-2015 context.

Traditional development co-operation accounts for a decreasing proportion of the overall development finance envelope for countries in the region. In this sense, the HLM in Mexico should clearly articulate the role that development co-operation can play within an increasingly complex landscape over the next fifteen years. While development co-operation accounts for a smaller proportion of total resources, countries in the region emphasise the continued importance of co-operation for their development paths, recognising that different resources perform different functions and the need to develop mechanisms and partnerships that leverage the complementarity of different resources.

Participating countries noted the preliminary analysis from a regional report, the Asia-Pacific Effective Development Co-operation report that has been commissioned by AP-DEF as part of building the regional evidence on the implementation of the Busan commitments for the First HLM in Mexico. This report which will be shared in early April is a bridge between country efforts and the global policy discourse, in particular the HLM in Mexico.

Plenary Two: Progress since Busan

Regional progress towards the commitments agreed in Busan (2011) is mixed, according to the GPEDC global survey in 2013/14. Greatest progress for the fifteen participating Asia-Pacific countries is noted in the indicators relating to development cooperation predictability and mutual accountability, while mixed progress in terms of untying aid and least progress made in terms of gender equality and aid on budget. There is recognition that reforms take time and that there are some encouraging signs of progress. Nevertheless, change has been slow in certain areas and accelerated progress is needed.

Sustained political will is essential to realising the vision developed in Busan, and Mexico will be a space in which partners can come together to renew and strengthen commitments, and make tangible plans to scale up efforts, particularly in meeting the unfinished agenda.

There is an urgent need to finalise the monitoring framework. Without monitoring we cannot identify the challenges and bottlenecks to progress nor realise our vision of an evidence-based approach for implementation. Some participants particularly highlight the enabling environment for civil society, in which indicators are yet to be developed. Restrictions on civil society space, through legislative changes and reduced access to funding, are apparent in some areas of the region and need to be captured within the regular monitoring process. There is also a need for urgent attention in addressing the bottlenecks to gender equality, an area in which there is a significant unfinished agenda from the MDGs. Preliminary results from the GPEDC global monitoring survey for 2013 show that many countries in the region do not have systems in place to track allocations towards improving gender equality.

Plenary Three: South-South Co-operation, Triangular Co-operation and Knowledge Sharing

South-South co-operation (SSC) and Triangular co-operation (TrC) are important complements to traditional development co-operation. It is notable that providers of SSC from the Asia-Pacific region are helping shape the international discourse on this modality of co-operation.

Sharing lessons learnt in overcoming common challenges is a potent tool for empowering countries and advancing progress. Knowledge sharing is important and there is a need to build stronger linkages between knowledge sharing at the national and international levels. Some participants encourage traditional providers of development co-operation to allocate greater resources towards TrC and knowledge sharing that augments the co-operation among developing countries.

Much of the discussion about SSTC at the global level has focused on inputs and, while this is important, as we look to Mexico and beyond there is a need to develop our understanding of the impact and results of SSC and TrC. Innovation, particularly from TrC, is vital to improving the effectiveness of SSC.

The Pacific Islands Peer Review process has been successful in enhancing the effectiveness of development co-operation in the sub-region. Strong and sustained political commitment from Pacific Forum leaders and timely technical and financial support from development partners have been crucial to driving the success of this form of SSC and lessons from the Pacific experience can be shared within the rest of the region and beyond.

Three components of mutual accountability which apply to SSC and wider development co-operation: responsibility, answerability and enforceability were proposed as part of a research conducted by the Seoul University as part of the key findings shared with participants. It also noted that least progress has been made in the area of enforceability. There is a need to develop systems which link and align national and international mutual accountability.

Plenary Four: Development Co-operation with Middle Income Countries

Middle income countries (MICs) in the Asia-Pacific region are extremely diverse in the challenges and vulnerabilities they face, as well as the capacity of overcoming these issues. Despite MICs in the Asia-Pacific region accounting for 57% of global poverty (those living below US$1.25 a day), they face the challenges of declining development co-operation and reduced access to concessional finance.

There is an urgent need to revise both the way in which countries are classified and the way in which classification systems are used to determine the provision of development co-operation. Mexico is the place in which a conversation on this issue can begin.

Many MICs in the Asia-Pacific region stress the importance of continued development co-operation for sustained progress in the MDGs and emerging post-2015 agenda. The nature of co-operation will evolve and the GPEDC is a forum in which these evolving partnerships can be discussed. There is a need for broader policy coherence in co-operation with MICs, in areas such as trade, migration and the global financial system. The impact of declining co-operation on civil society and other non-state domestic actors should be considered as a critical part of basic service delivery within MICs.

Plenary Five: Partnering for Effective Taxation and Domestic Resource Mobilisation for Development

Domestic resource levels are rising in many countries in the Asia-Pacific region although significant issues constrain further progress, such as illicit finance, corruption and the challenge of expanding tax bases to incorporate the informal sector. It is important to consider the social impacts of different revenue raising strategies, for example direct and indirect taxes.

Resource rich countries face many challenges in sustainably managing natural resources, particularly the lack of institutional capacity as well as the exposure of the economy to volatility in international markets. The GPEDC is an ideal forum to share lessons learnt, scale up country and regional good practice and to galvanise support for strengthening country systems.

Plenary Six: Business as a Partner in Development

Private sector business is growing rapidly in the Asia-Pacific region and we recognise that holistic development must involve the participation of all actors; public, private and civil society. Examples from Palau on reform of the health system and in the tourist industry, demonstrate that great things can be achieved where the government and private sector work together. Effective public-private dialogue is essential and the alignment of corporate and social priorities should be a key feature of discussions in Mexico.

The majority of jobs in the region are created by the private sector, particularly by small and medium enterprises (SMEs). Increased focus should be placed on promoting SMEs and other domestic enterprises. Some raised the concerns that there have been instances where the involvement of the private sector has led to human rights abuses. There is a need to strengthen accountability mechanisms and increase transparency within the private sector.

Plenary 7: Consultation on the draft First HLM communiqué

The first HLM will take place in Mexico City on 15-16 April 2014. The first draft of the communiqué has been circulated and participants were given the opportunity to provide country and regional perspectives that will be further considered by Mexico in finalizing the communiqué². Beyond this consultation, participants and their organisations must act quickly if they wish to comment on or suggest amendments to the communiqué. It is noted that the wording of the communiqué will not be amended during the HLM itself. It was stressed for participants to consider the current draft alongside the Global Survey monitoring data that has been shared as soon as possible in order to contribute to the draft. Participants are encouraged in particular to highlight areas of contention or important issues that are not currently included in the draft. There was considerable feedback provided on the communiqué and the level of engagement denoted strong enthusiasm for a successful HLM in Mexico. Mexico and the GPEDC Joint Secretariat are committed to using the perspectives from this regional consultation to strengthen the communiqué.

Plenary 8: Role and Working Arrangements for the Global Partnership in Post-2015

² A third draft of the communiqué is now available on the Global partnership website. (www.effectivecooperation.org/resouces)

The Joint Support Unit provided feedback from the GPEDC steering committee meeting that was held in Abuja on 13-14 February 2014. Decisions taken at the recent meeting included the expansion of the committee, from 18 members to 24 members by mid-June. New members will include representatives from an Arab donor, non-traditional civil society (including trade unions), local government and foundations as well as additional representation from Africa and from countries which are both recipients and providers of development co-operation. The aim is to improve the steering committee's constituency-based model by incorporating previously under-represented constituencies. Rotation of co-chairs of the committee will be announced at Mexico. It is also noted that HLMs are scheduled to happen every 18-24 months.

Bangladesh, the AP-DEF Chair and Viet Nam, a member of the AP-DEF Steering Committee proposed that AP-DEF should be considered as a regional platform to support GPEDC Steering Committee members from the Asia-Pacific region. Indonesia also recognised the APDEF role in this regard. The Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat (PIFS) proposed that AP-DEF should collaborate closely with PIFS on Pacific country needs and perspectives.

With a view to reinforcing the institutionalization of the GPEDC, the Republic of Korea initiated to host an annual Workshop of the GPEDC, built upon the Busan Global Partnership Workshop held in Seoul on 18-19 November 2013. This initiative was endorsed by the Steering Committee in Abuja and has been well received by the participants. The workshop will play a role in advancing the Global Partnership implementation, with a focus on identifying key challenges at country, and providing knowledge-sharing on the Global Partnership monitoring exercise on the Busan principles working on the ground.

Part II: South-south capacity development clinics

Following plenaries on the topics that will be discussed at the Mexico HLM, discussions moved on to country-led south-south capacity development clinics.

Clinic One: Development Finance and Aid Assessments

Rethinking the role of ODA and situating it in a broader development finance landscape have been part of the Papua New Guinea and Viet Nam experience in implementing the Busan commitments and related implications on other national policies and reform efforts. The two countries' experiences including different approaches in conducting Development Finance and Aid Assessments (DFAA) shared with other countries attending the clinic (Cambodia, Fiji, Indonesia, Laos PDR, Nepal, and Pakistan) and development partners (Japan, RoK, UK) proved beneficial particularly for those interested in undertaking a similar study.

Clinic Two: Addressing Fragility

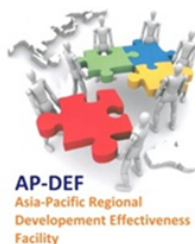

The New Deal for Engagement in Fragile States was born in the same process as the GPEDC at Busan in 2011. The principles of the New Deal remain valid and should be reiterated in Mexico. Country ownership of the agenda – from the very definition of fragility and progress, to the prioritisation of issues and the design of implementation – is vital for sustainable progress in fragile contexts. Fragility assessments are an important tool in this regard. Development partners are encouraged to support nationally-owned visions and align co-operation to country-led strategies.

Clinic Three: Development Co-operation Dialogue and Evidence-based Development Results Monitoring

That development Partners' commitment and willingness to provide accurate and quality data and to use a country's aid information management system cannot be over-emphasised, is a key take-away from the Nepal country experience on Aid Management Platforms (AMP). Analysis of AMP generated and stored data has enabled more informed discussions with development partners and has helped in bringing about positive change in terms of predictability of aid, reducing fragmented project-based modalities to more programme-based and better understanding of the aid on budget and aid off budget.
