How might partner countries benefit from including the private sector, especially large multinational companies, in development planning and delivery? What are some of the risks, and what support can development partners offer to support the mitigation of these risks, to ensure a country-owned and led approach? 2. How could donors and international actors assist partner countries in the establishment of more effective institutional platforms for dialogue with the domestic private sector, which can support better development planning and turn dialogue into concrete action and results? Are there good examples that can be learned from? 3. Global business is keen that the development community moves beyond a conception of the private sector only being sources of financing for development, encouraging a broader concept of business that recognises diverse interests and incentives that can add value to development partnerships. What kind of practical contributions, knowledge and skills could governments seek from private sector partners to accommodate such interests whilst maintaining a focus on the SDGs? What might the risks be in doing so? 4. A critical first step in building effective partnerships of any sort is the establishment of shared objectives and a shared vision for success between all parties. How can the use of country systems at national and sub-national levels and alignment to partner country priorities be best achieved in a crisis context? For example, what can donors do to better support partner country capacities to lead the response, and what can partner countries do to assert leadership and coordinate international actors in the response? 2. How can donors and partner countries better incorporate civil society in the planning, delivery and monitoring of development in complex contexts? What are the barriers to this and how might they be overcome? 3. What is the role of international actors and donors in supporting governments to retain a focus on the poorest and most vulnerable, including women and girls, in fragile contexts? What are the challenges and how can improved partnerships help resolve these? 4. How can donors and international partners support partner countries to improve their capacity to measure results in fragile contexts? What are particular challenges for GPEDC monitoring in fragile states and how can they be overcome? 5. There are many challenges to implementing the post-2015 agenda in fragile contexts, and these challenges differ depending on the nature and type of fragility, for example political and/or environmental fragility. Given these challenges, what should the priorities of the GPEDC be in maximising development effectiveness in these complex contexts? 6. How can humanitarian and development actors, systems and processes achieve greater synergies in contexts where the goal is to build resilience in populations? What could the GPEDC do to support better linkages? 7.
